

EADMT TRAINING STANDARDS CRITERIA

DMT training standards produced by EADMT are for the profession of Dance Movement Therapy

The EADMT has reached a consensus with their Training Standards Working Group following consultation with all Full Professional Members of EADMT. The aim of this consultation, since 2012, has been to ensure a minimum level of training standards criteria applicable to Dance Movement Therapy programmes across Europe, specifically to meet best practice and achieve high quality European DMT practitioners. As DMT is taught in private and university educational institutions EADMT wishes to support both types of organisations to ensure they work towards adoption of the agreed standards by 2020. Where an institution is halfway through the training programme of a student cohort, it is understood that the new standards will be adopted with any new intake from 2020 onwards.

The intention is that Full Professional EADMT Members will both meet and evidence these agreed minimum standards regarding their national accredited and/or recognised DMT training programmes. The EADMT aspires for all Members to work towards these minimum standards from 2020 and will encourage and support Full Basic Members and Associate Members in their efforts to grow the DMT profession in their countries.

Please note: EADMT have aimed for inclusivity and where special national and educational differences between countries, university programmes and private institutions exist, EADMT wishes that these Training Standards criteria offer a clear framework towards which to aspire.

ADDENDUM: During 2018/19 the EADMT Training Standards Working Group have been meeting to discuss, clarify and design the way forward. The Standards remain the same with some small edits to clarify them. These have come about as National Associations have addressed and applied the TS to their national programmes.

	Assessment 1. EADMT suggests student evaluation takes place twice a year - minimum 2. Each programme should maintain an attendance register for monitoring and evaluation purposes	a) The assessment of students is of utmost importance, for the student themselves, for the faculty and to meet professional standards. b) An evaluation method is particularly important within programmes where every course/module may be taught by a different faculty member. Such courses require each tutor to complete an evaluation for each student following their module/course. EADMT suggest adopting this method across all programmes, with a frequency that meets their specific needs. The following minimum of formal assessments are suggested: i) An annual essay/creative presentation (equivalent to 2,500 words) reflecting on the experience of the Interpersonal Learning Group/Self-experience/Process Group, drawing from group theory and practice literature. ii) Two essays (3,000 words), during the whole training, exploring the key therapeutic concepts that have assisted the practical component of their studies. iii) A Case Study in final year (5,000-6,000 words), drawing on theory and practice and exploring the relevance to the client of one or two clinical sessions. It is strongly recommended to require an oral presentation of the Case Study. iv) An oral assessment of a) the student running a group warm-up, b) exploring the development of their work with an individual or group, c) presentation (10-15 minutes) of a particular client group and the relevance of DMT to this group.
